One of these heavy-metal bands is a fake, one is authentic. Can you tell the difference? (The answer is at the end of the Pop Eye column.)

"We're hoping that not just kids, but the kind of people who like shows like 'SCTV' and 'Saturday Night Live' will see this is as a satire that just takes rock to its logical extreme."

ON THE TOWN: Wherever there's a jam session, you can usually find Al Kooper. Last week's weekly pick-up show at the Central was no exception, with the elder rock generation (Kooper and guitarist Jeff Baxter) going head to head against a pair of young rockabilly princes, the Stray Cats' Brian Setzer and Slim Jim Phantom . . . . The Central will host a rock swap meet today at noon, featuring memorabilia (tour jackets, T-shirts and backstage passes) donated by various musicians. Part of the proceeds from the event will go to Action Research for Multiple Sclerosis, a research-information group which aids MS victims . . . . Speaking of musicales, Twisted Roots' new album, "Paul Roessler's Pandemonium Shadow Show Featuring Twisted Roots" features an all-star cast of local luminaries, including 45 Grave's Paul Cutler, the Weirdos' Dix Denney, new Black Flag bassist Kira Roessler, plus artwork by Tomato Du Plenty and 45 Grave's Dinah Cancer and liner note poetry by Richard Meltzer . . . . And X's fans should be on the lookout for a new photo collection called "Beyond and Back: The Story of X." Due out this week, the photo album was edited by F. Stop Fitzgerald, with a text by the L.A. Reader's contributing music editor Chris Morris, which includes excerpts from the band's lyrics, interviews and a complete discography.

VIDEORGY: Who's absolutely the last person in the world you'd expect to see in a rock video? (And we do mean absolutely). Try New Orleans Saints football coach Bum Phillips, who is one of the stars, along with a host of Saints players, in the video promotion clip for the PolyGram sound track to "All the Right Moves." Though the film is about small-town high school football, PolyGram asked NFL Films (which recently did a video for Journey) to focus on a pro team with a more recognizable cast of characters. The video features game footage, a Saints calisthenics session and a peptalk
